The Flyaway Tickets

Hsu-Kung Liu

 SCHOLASTIC

This is the story of a bus ride.

"Please show me your tickets!"
says the bus driver.

*But, before the bus driver can check them,
a sudden gust of wind blows the tickets away!*

Off they fly, through the streets and over the hills ...

"Oh no!" cries the bus driver.
"No time to waste —
we must find the tickets!"

He revs the engine.
*Vroom, vroom.

The bus speeds off,
up and over mountains
and down into deep valleys.

On meeting some wise men, the bus driver cries,
"Have you seen our tickets?"

"The tickets have flown away, but will surely come back to you," the wise men reply.

"You do not have to run after them."

"Those tickets must be found!"
says the bus driver, ignoring the wise men's advice.

The bus driver steers the bus through floods and through fire, down steep mountain roads and past sheer cliffs and raging seas.

"Have you seen our tickets?"
the bus driver asks an angry sea serpent.

But, "Go back! Go back!
There are many dangers here!"
roars the serpent.

"No — nothing will stop us, the tickets must be found!" cries the bus driver.

The bus finally reaches the lowlands.
There are cars galore.
Vroom, vroom, vroom ...

What should they do?
The bus speeds ahead.
